It's been 10 years since 28-year-old preschool teacher Kyla Annan was found strangled to death at her home in Reno.

"It's a pretty hard time," Kyla's father, Steven Annan, said Friday afternoon. "In 10 years you can bury a lot."

Annan and his wife, Cheryl, of South Lake Tahoe, sat unmoving at a press conference Friday, with their hands clasped on their laps and solemn expressions on their faces in a corner of a briefing room at the Reno Police Department.

They had recently learned police arrested the man believed to have slain their daughter.
