

Opinion: Where's the safest place in Calif. to live?

By Shawn Hubler, Sacramento Bee

Last week, as Los Angeles burned, San Francisco baked, Houston reeled amid biblical flooding and the Florida Keys braced for Hurricane Irma, David W. Titley picked up his phone on the other side of the country and cut to the chase.

"Forty north," the Penn State University meteorology professor of practice told me, almost before I'd asked the question. "I'd basically look at being north of that."

My query was one many of us are wondering about in this age of mounting natural disasters: If climate change is a given, what's the best place to live? Or, maybe, the least-worst?
